

program director BUSHLIGHT

- Community development focus in remote Indigenous communities
- Alice Springs based with regular travel
- Attractive remuneration

Bushlight, a key project of The Centre for Appropriate Technology, installs, maintains and upgrades renewable energy systems in remote Indigenous communities around Australia. The project also provides energy planning, sustainable energy services and livelihood advice and support within a community development framework. Since its inception in 2002 Bushlight has installed renewable energy systems in 120 remote Indigenous communities.

You will be responsible for the further expansion of this already successful and respected project. Leading a team of 30 highly skilled and motivated staff you will drive the strategic and operational aspects of the project. Crucially, you will maintain the exemplary standards of community engagement and monitoring and reporting to Federal and State funding partners.

You're currently a Program or Project Director for an international development agency, clean tech provider, government department or similar with a track record in providing infrastructure and service delivery in remote locations. Ideally, you have a passion for both Indigenous affairs and sustainable energy and knowledge of state and federal government departments.

If you would like to lead a team committed to providing a sustainable future for remote Indigenous communities please contact Richard Green or Annie Barker on (02) 8243 0570 or forward your application to cv@ngorecruitment.com quoting #30717.
